5 THINGS TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO.US

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT, REPORTER

It was two years ago, but I still remember the original Women's March like it was yesterday. There was a sense of unity and a lot of excitement in the air, even with all the frustrations that fueled people to the streets. But this year, things may be a bit different. The movement has been split into separate factions following allegations of anti-Semitism in the Washington Women's March leadership. For New York City, that means there will be two separate events this Saturday. Read more about the tale of two women's marches inside and at metro.us.

TRUMP PULLS MILITARY PLANE FROM PELOSI

1 President Donald Trump on Thursday stopped House of Representatives Speaker Nancy Pelosi from using a military plane for an overseas trip, in a tit for tat after the Democratic leader's suggestion he postpone the State of the Union address during the partial government shutdown. Republican Trump told Pelosi in a letter that her trip to Belgium, Egypt and Afghanistan, which he derided as a "public relations event," would be postponed, citing the shutdown that has entered its 27th day. Pelosi had planned to visit U.S. troops in Afghanistan, with a stop in Brussels for meetings to reaffirm the United States' "ironclad commitment" to NATO, spokesman Drew Hammill said. Egypt was not on the itinerary. The weekend trip had not been announced before Trump released his letter. Lawmakers often do not publicize foreign trips before they occur for security reasons, particularly when the trips involve a war zone as in this case. "Due to the shutdown, I am sorry to inform you that your trip to Brussels, Egypt and Afghanistan has been postponed," Trump's letter said.

SNOW AND BITTER COLD EXPECTED THIS WEEKEND

2 Snow is in the New York City weather forecast once again, and though it won't be a foot of the white stuff, officials are warning New Yorkers to take precautions. The Department of Sanitation issued a snow alert for Thursday night into Friday. Friday should be a bit warmer, though, with temperatures reaching up to 42 degrees, compared to the high of 33 on Thursday. Some more snow is expected throughout the weekend. The National Weather Service issued a Winter Storm Watch in effect from Saturday afternoon through Sunday afternoon. Saturday will get colder with a high around freezing, and forecasters say that "heavy mixed precipitation" is possible, with three to six inches possible of total snow and sleet accumulation. The cold weather could cause ice accumulation of up to one-tenth of an inch. Sunday could see a mix of rain, snow and sleet. "Sunday afternoon into the evening could cause any standing water to quickly freeze over," forecasters warned. Expect strong wind gusts Sunday afternoon into the night. Monday night will be cold again, with a low around 12.

FACEBOOK BLOCKS SPUTNIK-LINKED ACCOUNTS

4 Facebook Inc. said on Thursday it had removed hundreds of Russia-initiated accounts, which it judged to be involved in coordinated inauthentic behavior on its platforms, including some linked to state-owned news agency Sputnik. In a separate statement, Sputnik attacked the social network for a decision it said was political and amounted to censorship of seven Facebook pages belonging to its news hubs in neighboring countries. Facebook's head of cybersecurity policy, Nathaniel Gleicher, said in a blog post it had unearthed two separate operations which originated in Russia, with one active in multiple countries across eastern Europe and the other specific to Ukraine. The social media company said it had taken down about 364 Facebook pages and accounts operating in Baltic Sea states, Central Asia, the Caucasus, and parts of Europe, and that the pages were linked to employees of Sputnik. "Despite their misrepresentations of their identities, we found that these pages and accounts were linked to employees of Sputnik," Gleicher wrote.

PRINCE PHILIP, 97, ESCAPES UNHURT FROM CAR CRASH

5 Queen Elizabeth's 97-year-old husband Prince Philip escaped uninjured from a car crash while driving on Thursday near the Sandringham estate in eastern England. Police said two people in a car that collided with that of the prince, also known as the Duke of Edinburgh, were both taken to hospital for minor injuries but later discharged. Pictures from the scene showed a Land Rover overturned on the side of the road. The accident occurred when Philip was pulling out of a driveway onto a main road, the BBC reported, quoting a witness saying he was very shaken. Philip drove former President Barack Obama and his wife Michelle to lunch during their state visit to Britain in 2016. Buckingham Palace confirmed Thursday's accident. "The Duke was not injured," it added in a statement. A palace spokeswoman later confirmed Philip was at the wheel and was checked by a doctor afterwards. He did not go to hospital and was now back at Sandringham, the private country residence owned by Queen Elizabeth in the county of Norfolk.

NYPD organized 'large-scale' Black Lives Matter surveillance

Activist photos were kept by the police for years.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Nearly 700 NYPD emails show a large-scale effort to monitor Black Lives Matter protesters by undercover cops trained to take down organized crime, according to documents obtained by attorney M.J. Williams.

The emails also reveal that the department has held on to its findings, including photographs of individual activists, nearly four years later, raising First Amendment concerns.

Those emails were obtained by M.J. Williams Law via a Freedom of Information Law (FOIL) request and include communications between November 2014 and January 2015. They build on a prior FOIL disclosure from July 2018.

In July, after an initial FOIL request and court case, Williams obtained 75 NYPD communications that showed undercover officers monitored Black Lives Matter activists, tracked their movements and kept photos of individuals on file.

"When we received them, we noticed NYPD's numbering system and realized, 'Oh my God, there's about 700 more of these," Williams said. "So in August 2018 we put in a request and, without going to court but with a couple of appeals, we got the 694 emails from NYPD in November 2018. We've been going over them and vetting them and so on, and released them [Thursday]."

These hundreds of emails detail communications between the NYPD Intelligence Bureau's Criminal Intelligence Section on the locations of protesters and Black Lives Matter events.

"It's significant that this surveillance operation was led by the Criminal Intelligence Section of the NYPD," said Williams. "There was a presumption of criminality reflected in how the NYPD treated these protests and even leading to the decision to assemble and lead this ongoing operation."

Officers paid particular attention to "cop watchers," according to the documents, and took multiple photos of activists who wore uniforms identifying themselves as Cop Watch members.

Anyone can legally record the police, but the Justice Committee, a grassroots organization against police violence, has a specific Cop Watch Project for which activists wear shirts that identify them as cop watchers.

The NYPD took multiple pictures of these cop watchers as part of their Black Lives Matter surveillance, sharing the photos with notes like "coordinater [sic] at times square. Has walkie talkie" and "This is a picture of one of the guys that was on the two way radios organizing crowds to different locations … he was calling a protester '85 to go to 7/42 to shut down the traffic."

Although these emails wrongly identify that particular cop watcher as a leader of the Black Lives Matter protests, they are significant, Williams said, because they show the NYPD's alleged "animosity" toward these cop watchers.

"These were the protests in response largely to the failure to indict [Officer] Daniel Pantaleo for killing Eric Garner. People know about Garner because Ramsey Orta was filming it," said Williams.

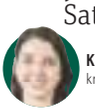
Everything you need to know about NYC's two women's march events

Both the Women's March on New York City and the Women's Unity Rally will be held Saturday.



KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Following President Donald Trump's inauguration in 2017, hundreds of thousands of protestors took to the streets around the country for the Women's March. Now, two years later, activists are ready to take action again at this weekend's 2019 Women's March on New York City.

This year, though, there are two separate events, after questions over inclusivity have fractured the movement nationwide.

The Women's March Alliance is the group that's been running the Women's March on New York City since its start in 2017. This is separate from the Washington Women's March organization, which has a New York City chapter.

National Women's March leadership in Washington has come under fire after accusations of anti-Semitism stemming from ties between Women's March co-president Tamika Mallory and Louis Farrakhan, the Nation of Islam leader who has a reputation for making anti-Semitic remarks. Both women's marches are set for Saturday, Jan. 19.

Some Jewish community members leaders have since said they won't attend the Women's March New York City chapter, instead choosing to go to the Alliance's Women's March on New York City.

Rabbi Ammiel Hirsch, senior rabbi of Stephen Wise Free Synagogue on the Upper West Side, said in a sermon on Friday that the synagogue was disassociating from the Washington faction.

Though the two groups reportedly had discussed merging, they could not reach a consensus and so there will be two 2019 women's marches. Here's what you need to know about Saturday's events.

2019 Women's March NYC–Women's Unity Rally

The New York City chapter of the national Women's March does not actually have a parade permit to march, so it's holding a Women's Unity Rally.

Attendees will meet at 10 a.m. on Saturday, Jan. 9, at Foley Square in downtown Manhattan. That event will go until 2 p.m., according to its event page, and is a partnership between the Women's March NYC and the New York Immigration Coalition. The NYPD will issue a sound permit to the New York Immigration Coalition "for amplified sound for a stationary rally in Foley Square."

2019 Women's March on New York City

For the Women's March Alliance event, known as the Women's March on New York City, marchers will begin lining up at 10 a.m. on Saturday at 72nd and Columbus, or 72nd and Central Park. Disabled and ASL-communicating marchers can enter at 61st and Broadway.

The Women's March on New York City 2019 officially kicks off between 11 a.m. and 11:15 a.m. The route will go south around Columbus Circle, east onto 59th Street and then turn south onto 6th Avenue, ending at 44th Street and 6th Avenue.

The NYPD has approved a parade permit for the Women's March Alliance. Parade permits are granted to "the first applicant, or in the case of annual events, to the historical applicant," according to the department.

No relief in sight for cab drivers on taxi congestion pricing

No decision about the $2.50 taxi tax until the end of the month.

WILL DRICKEY
will.drickey@metro.us

New York City taxi drivers found some much-needed respite over the holidays after a federal judge blocked the city's new taxi congestion pricing surcharge until both sides could make their case in court.

Now that the day has come, drivers are in the same position as before, with the judge extending the block until Jan. 31, at which point they will give a more permanent ruling. Advocates are getting tired of spinning their wheels just to go nowhere.

"Everybody pretty much has the same issue with congestion pricing," said Aleksey Medvedovskiy, president of the NYC Taxi Group. "Everybody has mentioned the same problems."

Taxi drivers protested outside the courtroom before the hearing, claiming that allowing the surcharge to stay will mean the destruction of their livelihoods. While the proposed tax does add more to the price of ride-share apps than taxis ($2.75 vs. $2.50), the law only adds a $0.75 charge to shared pool rides, making them by far the most affordable option, something that taxi medallion holders argue will shut them out of the market entirely.

"I guess we just have to wait for what will come down," Medvedovskiy added, sighing. "And then we can figure out what will be the next step."

The problem for taxi drivers isn't just one of clinging to their current jobs in the face of a current marketplace — many taxi drivers have had to go deep into debt in order to get the medallions that allow them to operate their own cabs. While an Uber driver unable to work misses out on potential income, taxi drivers are stuck paying generational debts, whether their car is parked or not.

Gov. Andrew Cuomo proposed the taxi congestion pricing surcharge as the first step in his initiative to fund the MTA and cut down on traffic in Manhattan in one fell swoop. Ultimately, he wants to charge all traffic fees to enter the island during the busiest hours of the day. But taxi advocates say that it doesn't make sense to start with for-hire vehicles alone.

Taxi advocates argue that congestion pricing surcharges for taxis unfairly benefit ride-share apps. GETTY IMAGES

"Either everybody should pay, including private cars, trucks and the rest of the vehicles, to be in congestion pricing zones," Medvedovskiy said, "or nobody should pay for it."

In this one instance, Medvedovskiy finds himself in agreement with ride-share apps.

"Recent research by both NYU and McKinsey shows that increases in e-commerce and home delivery have an outsized role in lower traffic speeds and congestion in Manhattan," a Lyft representative said about the surcharge. "This is why it's critical that all vehicles, particularly commercial and personal vehicles, also contribute congestion fees."

Putting taxi congestion pricing first isn't the only aspect of Cuomo's plan that's undergoing scrutiny. His proposal to split the costs of fixing New York's subway system evenly between the city and state was met with outright incredulity by Mayor Bill de Blasio.

If the surcharge is allowed to remain, the minimum taxi fare in Manhattan will become $5.80, while the base price for Uber will reach $10.75.

Advocates for the price increases, however, argue that taxi drivers' fears for their livelihoods are unfounded.

"There are a privileged number of people who take taxis and Ubers to get around the core of the city," Danny Pearlstein, a rep for Riders Alliance, told The New York Times. "They can afford to support the transit system that makes New York what it is."

Even so, taxi drivers are hopeful.

"I think there's a pretty good chance this will disappear," Medvedovskiy said. "And vanish."

The documentary offers a new look at World War I. WARNER BROS.

Why Peter Jackson restored WWI footage for 'They Shall Not Grow Old'

The director talks us through his new documentary.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

"They Shall Not Grow Old" is a documentary that will provoke an array of reactions.

Peter Jackson's meticulous efforts to explore and restore around 100 hours of footage from the First World War has resulted in an enthralling, dramatic, sweeping and detailed breakdown of what soldiers had to endure during this hell.

Obviously that means that large parts of the film are hard to watch, but at the same time, "They Shall Not Grow Old" still manages to forge a poignant bond between its viewers and the real people that were captured in the documentary, most of whom perished.

"I am not an historian," Jackson tells Metro. "I am not out to tell a twist story to the first World War or anything. A lot of historians do stuff like that."

So what did Jackson want to achieve with "They Shall Not Grow Old?"

"I wanted to make something where people who had family in the first World War, like most of the British Empire, like myself - my grandfather was killed, so was the grandfather of my wife Fran — I just wanted to make a movie where you could connect with what your own ancestors went through," says Jackson. "Because they all shared a very similar experience. The same food, the same shellfire, the same mud, the same lice. I just felt it was a way that everyone could connect with what their family member's experienced. That's what I hope this experience was like."

The footage came courtesy of the Imperial War Museum in London's archives, as well as the hundred hours of video footage they also had 600 hours of audio for Jackson to devour, too.

"They Shall Not Grow Old" premiered in the U.K. on Nov. 11, the 100th anniversary of the Armistice, to rapture reviews critically, while it provoked an emotional response from its viewers across the country — which didn't surprise the Kiwi filmmaker.

"It should be emotional," says Jackson. "Because it gives you an opportunity to think of family members that are long since dead. Because you don't think about them most days.

"So it was nice to have an hour and a half where your thoughts go to them," he adds. "You get up the next day and get on with your life. But it is important to remember where you came from. Because their DNA is still in our bodies."

But there was one unanswerable question that Jackson repeatedly pondered during his three years working on the film.

"You also can't help but think, 'I wonder how I would do in that scenario?' I literally don't know how I would do. But it wouldn't be much fun."

"They Shall Not Grow Old" opens in theaters Jan. 21.

BLINDINGLY BRIGHT HALOGEN LIGHTS

I own a car and my Grumble is the pickup truck drivers (and some car owners) who install super-bright halogen lights on the front of their vehicles. It may help you see better at night, but you are blinding drivers in front of you since we can see your bright lights through the rear-view mirror. Furthermore, some of them honk at you when you slow down to turn or yield to pedestrians in the crosswalk, which is very rude. How are these super-bright lights on cars allowed by the city?

If it is the potholes you are trying to avoid, then install some fog lights, which work and will not blind the drivers in front of you.

Ben Barnes plays Jigsaw in season 2. CARA HOWE/NETFLIX

Ben Barnes explains 'The Punisher' season 2's approach to Jigsaw

He isn't the iconic villain comic book fans may be expecting, but that's OK!

ANDREW HUSBAND

When a recent trailer for "The Punisher" season two finally revealed what the Netflix show's version of the iconic villain Jigsaw would look like, some longtime comic book readers weren't too keen on it. Sure, Billy Russo's (Ben Barnes) face was no longer the pristine, pretty visage it had once been before Frank Castle (Jon Bernthal) had smashed it into a broken mirror in season one, but it was nothing like the horrifying face fans were familiar with. As Barnes tells Metro, however, audiences shouldn't rush to condemn their take on Jigsaw just yet.

"I wanted it to be more gruesome at first," he says. "Have an eye pulled down, a lip curled up and all these stitches and scars. But they persuaded me differently by saying that he had had 12 hours of professional plastic surgery, during which they put him back to together. Mostly. Sure, there are cartoon versions of this that exist. There are the 'War Zone' comics and the movie based on them. They worked really well and we didn't want to make something like that, something that had already been made."

Of course, simply avoiding the same look as the comic books and previous iterations of the character wasn't the sole intent of Barnes, the writers and the makeup team. In fact, the "Westworld" actor traces this version's more psychologically-specific interpretation on conversations he'd had with showrunner Steve Lightfoot while shooting season 1.

"The catalyst for it, I believe, was a conversation between myself and Steve when we were shooting the carousel fight at the end of season 1, when my face is being smashed against the mirror so many times, I remember thinking to myself, 'Wow, these brain injuries would be really bad. His brain would be rattling around in his skull a lot.' I thought, aside from the physical damage, it would also potentially cause major issues with the frontal lobe, especially personality and memory. It made me think of the movie 'Memento.'"

Barnes just so happened to be working with Jonathan Nolan, whose short story served as the inspiration for that film, on HBO's "Westworld." This spurred more conversations about what Frank's pummeling would do to Billy's brain.

"I thought, 'Wouldn't it be cool if he couldn't necessarily remember all the bad things he had done, or what had been done to him? What if he had become a kind of blank slate, albeit one infused with all this suffering, torment, history and intimacy that he couldn't quite place or explain?' I just found it all so fascinating, and it turned out that Steve did too. We figured that, instead of Billy becoming Jigsaw because of what Frank had done to his face, what if the puzzle was actually in his mind?"

The move also allowed Lightfoot and Barnes to conceive of a new storyline for Russo that would better fit his military background, which he shares with Castle in season 1.

"I was reading a lot about veterans who were coming back from combat with injuries that weren't visible on the outside," the actor explains. "Their scars were, and are, very much on the inside. This makes many of them feel like they can't really share what they've been through because people won't necessarily see the ugliness, shame or rage that they feel. It's not literally written all over their faces."

"The Punisher" season two is now on Netflix.

The actor talks returning for "Glass" and more.

DMITRY BELYAEV, MWN
letters@metro.us

Metro caught up with actor and film producer Samuel L. Jackson, who plays Elijah Price in the 2019 superhero thriller film "Glass" — the final installment of M. Night Shyamalan's hit trilogy, following "Unbreakable" (2000) and "Split" (2016).

You were pushing for a trilogy since "Unbreakable" was released in 2000. Are you happy that it's finally complete?
I'm glad I had closure. It felt like an open-ended story. It felt like everything has been said and done that needed to be said and done. And it was great to go back to it, allow these characters to breathe and have this completion.

Comics were a niche back then. And now we are oversaturated with comic-book films and TV series.
You think that? Is it over-saturation or they are just catching up?

Well, if they are catching up, is it a good thing?
Sure. There've always been adventure stories. When I was a kid there were westerns, pirate and monster movies. Now there are more platforms, more people, more devices to see things on. Kids now play video games that are… like movies, right? So, movies have to compete with that. There are many different things to keep up with.

Are you a comic-book fan yourself?
Yes. But I don't specifically read superhero comic books. I read graphic novels, like "Southern Bastards" and "Scalped." I love manga.

Are comics an important part of culture now, in your opinion?
Not necessarily. It's always been a form of escapism. It is entry-level reading, in a certain way. For example, when I was a kid, my mama had a rule that for every five comic books I read, I had to read a classic. In comics you have visual along with your literature. It makes your mind active.

Have you ever met a real-life superhero?
That depends. You know, I think there are people, like Nelson Mandela, who under extraordinary circumstances developed an extraordinary idea of life that was able to affect a great amount of people through experiences and history.

What about supervillains?
We got one on the way out.

What are your superpowers?
I hope my superpower is making people laugh, and entertained, and making sure their money is worth it when they see a movie.

"Glass" is now in theaters.

LOS ANGELES RAMS AT NEW ORLEANS SAINTS (-3.5)

Moneyline: Rams +165, Saints -185
Betting total: 56.5 points
Time (Eastern), TV: 3:05 p.m., FOX

The Los Angeles Rams and New Orleans Saints, both 13-3 in the regular season, seemed destined to meet in the NFC Championship game. They were given stiff tests in the Divisional Round by the Cowboys and Eagles, respectively, but each club survived. Given their dominance at home this season and their 10-point victory over L.A. in the Superdome in Week 9, it's no surprise that New Orleans is favored by more than a field goal here. However, an upset could be in the making.

Todd Gurley and C.J. Anderson ran wild on Dallas at the L.A. Coliseum last week, as each man recorded a 100-yard rushing game. Like the Cowboys, the Saints' calling card on defense is their run stopping (second in the league at 78.4 yards allowed per contest). If the Rams can get their run game going as they did a week ago, they'll be in good shape in the NFC Championship Game.

The Saints' offense, meanwhile, has cooled considerably in recent weeks. Drew Brees and company have topped 20 points just twice in their last five games (excluding Week 17, when Brees sat out). That's led to a 1-4 record against the spread in that span. Michael Thomas is fresh off a 12-catch, 171-yard effort against the Eagles, and he did register 12 catches for 211 yards against L.A. in Week 9, but Aqib Talib wasn't active then. His presence in the secondary on Sunday could stymie the Saints' aerial attack to some extent. The Rams' defense on the road was certainly better than it was at home, as they allowed just 19.9 points per contest in away games (6th in the league) compared to 23.9 points per game overall (20th).

Rams vs. Saints has the makings of a high-scoring but closely-contested tilt. Bettors would be wise to grab the points with L.A. and give a good look at the Over despite the high total.

Prediction: Rams win, 34-31
The play: Rams +3.5 and Rams vs. Saints Over 56.5 points Parlay (+264)

NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS AT KANSAS CITY CHIEFS (-3)

Moneyline: Patriots +130, Chiefs -150
Betting total: 55 points
Time (Eastern), TV: 6:40 p.m., CBS

A frigid Arrowhead Stadium will be the site of Sunday's AFC Championship Game between the New England Patriots and the Kansas City Chiefs. Temperatures are expected to be in the 20s, with the wind chill only serving to amplify the harsh conditions. Despite their 43-40 loss to New England back in Week 6, Kansas City is listed as the betting favorite. The total has dropped two points from the original mark of 57.

The most concrete trend heading into this matchup is the Patriots' struggles on the road. For the first time since 2009, Tom Brady and company posted a losing road record (3-5 straight-up and against the spread) in the regular season. Their strengths at home turned into weaknesses in away games; New England's league-leading plus-15.9 point differential at home contrasts starkly with its minus-2.4 point differential in away contests. The Pats didn't travel all that well this year either, allowing an average of over three additional points per tilt compared to their overall number.

Meanwhile, in spite of all the criticism of the Chiefs' defense this year, they've actually been better than average at Arrowhead Stadium. Their points per game allowed mark of 17.4 was the third-best in the NFL. Kansas City's stoppers thoroughly dominated Andrew Luck and the Colts last Saturday, surrendering just one offensive touchdown in a 31-13 shellacking.

Given the extremely cold weather, points won't be as easy to come by as they were when these clubs collided in Foxboro in Week 6. Therefore, capitalizing on prime scoring chances will be crucial. Patrick Mahomes' offense was among the best in the NFL at turning red zone trips into touchdowns, finding the end zone 72 percent of the time (second). New England's conversion percentage was just 60.9 (14th).

Kansas City's offense seems better-equipped to handle the bitter conditions thanks to Tyreek Hill. Mahomes can find "The Cheetah" in the flat and let him use his legs to beat the defense. Julian Edelman looked like he was coated in butter as he tallied 151 yards on nine receptions against the Chargers, but L.A.'s defense was probably exhausted from a grueling schedule that saw them constantly traveling. Edelman also had the benefit of a week's rest.

This seems like a very fair line for a Chiefs team that was thoroughly dominant at times at home this year. The Patriots have lost three straight road playoff games, and it looks like it will be four on Sunday night. Give the field goal with K.C., and consider betting the Under on this big number as well.

Prediction: Chiefs win, 27-21
The play: Chiefs -3 and Patriots vs. Chiefs Under 55 points Parlay (+264)

METS SHOULD GET IN ON MANNY MACHADO

@JoePantorno

If the market is as low for Manny Machado as reported, the Mets have no excuse for not going after him. REUTERS

There is no denying that the New York Mets are suddenly hampered with a crowded infield.

After the signing of Jed Lowrie, who could very well be the team's starting second or third baseman come Opening Day, the Mets are experiencing a logjam that will see Robinson Cano, Todd Frazier, Amed Rosario and Jeff McNeil all looking to get every-day playing time. It could force manager Mickey Callaway to move natural second baseman Cano or natural third baseman Frazier to first base while Rosario remains the every-day shortstop.

It looks like McNeil, who batted .329 in his first year in the majors last season, will be splitting his time as a utility infielder and backup outfielder.

But after current developments on the free-agent market, there is no reason why the Mets should not at least think about making things even more crowded and going after All-Star infielder Manny Machado.

According to a report by Buster Olney, which was vehemently denied by Machado's agent Dan Lozano, the Chicago White Sox have offered the 26-year-old a seven-year, $175 million deal. That amounts to around $25 million per season.

In today's age of social media and the internet, we've been seeing a trend of insiders and sleuths alike trying to get the big story out as quickly as possible. So for that, Olney's report has to be taken with a grain of salt despite his standing as one of the most reputable names in the game.

If his source is true, however, then the teams interested in Machado should expand far more than just the three teams that held meetings with him in December, which were the New York Yankees, Philadelphia Phillies and White Sox.

Entering this offseason, it was originally forecasted that Machado would be earning a deal around the $300 million mark, something along the lines of a 10-year deal that pays $30 million in AAV.

But the excruciatingly slow process that has been Major League Baseball's offseason has seen Machado's value dwindle, especially after his showing in the postseason. Still, there is no denying that he is one of the best infielders in the majors today, Since 2015, he's slashed .284/.345/.511 with an average of 36 home runs and 96 RBI per season. Those are numbers that warrant a very rich deal, especially for a player who is just entering his prime.

Yet the White Sox's reported offer suddenly makes Machado seem much more affordable, though that still might not be as big of a bargain to coax the Mets into seriously pursuing him.

Mets owners the Wilpon Family have always been hesitant to give out big-time deals to star players. Over the past 20 years, we've really only seen it three times with the signings of Mike Piazza, Carlos Beltran and Yoenis Cespedes.

While they seem to still be reeling from the Bernie Madoff scandal that saw them lose millions, the Wilpons seem content building a big-market ball club on a budget. Which is why they will never be consistent and legitimate contenders.

As it stands, the Mets' 2019 payroll is around the $155 million mark. That's approximately $50 million below Major League Baseball's luxury tax threshold of $206 million. To compare how the other New York team does it, the Yankees are at around $212 million after the signing of D.J. LeMahieu.

The Mets' payroll is far too low for a team that is claiming it is the one to beat in the National League East, especially when the Phillies are on the verge of signing Bryce Harper and the defending division champion Atlanta Braves are continuing to build around a young, talented core.

Adding between $25 million to $30 million a season wouldn't break the bank for the Mets and would give them their starting third baseman for the next decade, at least. It then gives the Mets the flexibility to trade Frazier while Lowrie becomes a utility infielder that can play every position.

Suddenly you're looking at a starting infield in 2019 that could feature Peter Alonso at first, Cano at second, Rosario at shortstop and Machado at third. That's a pretty good-looking group.

Cejudo, Dillashaw headline UFC in Brooklyn

With UFC Fight Night 143 just days away, let's take a deep dive into the main event between Henry Cejudo and T.J. Dillashaw. Going into the fight, Dillashaw is the favorite to win based off betting odds. Not only do the odds say he's going to win, but a lot of UFC followers believe that as well.

Both Cejudo and Dillashaw have backgrounds in wrestling that will come in handy during this championship fight. Dillashaw's significant strikes landed per minute minus his significant strikes absorbed per minute is an outstanding plus-2.44 in his career, which ranks him the third-highest among bantamweight fighters and higher than any flyweight fighter.

Cejudo is just an average plus-0.82 in that category between both bantamweight and flyweight fighters.

One of the biggest differences between the two fighters is their ability to land meaningful strikes. Dillashaw lands 5.38 significant strikes per minute, whereas Cejudo only lands 3.42, which is below average among bantamweight and flyweight fighters.

Although Dillashaw is not exactly a very accurate striker, he does strike at an extremely high volume. Over the course of his UFC career, Dillashaw has landed 41 percent of significant strikes and has attempted 13.06 significant strikes per minute. In his last nine fights, Dillashaw has raised that total to an extraordinary 14.64 per minute.

To put that in perspective, Cejudo has only attempted 8.04 significant strikes per minute, which is a notable difference.

Even though things look bleak for Cejudo, he does have an advantage over Dillashaw. Cejudo's best plan for the attack might come from grappling exchanges since Dillashaw lands 71 percent of his significant strikes from distance and only 10 percent from the clinch.

Cejudo may have the chance to establish the clinch since 26 percent of his landed significant strikes come from that position. Even that might not come easy for Cejudo. Dillashaw has only allowed 11 significant clinch strikes in his last five fights.

Cejudo will be entering the octagon with a little bit of a chip on his shoulder because he feels disrespected.

Cejudo told MMAWeekly, "I'm going to make T.J. Dillashaw pay. Everybody, every once in a while, needs a little bit of that humble pie and he's going to get it." This was a direct response to when Dillashaw talked about becoming the greatest fighter of all time.
